

Prompt for recruitment fulfilment systems

Generate a short, friendly outreach message in two parts using the following format:

Opener (max 8 words):

Start with:

"Noticed [Company] is hiring for a [PositionName] —"

Then add a casual, non-obvious note about the role (like seniority, urgency, project scale). Keep it natural — something a recruiter or peer might say in a quick message. Do not use formal phrasing or generic buzzwords.

Follow-up (1-2 lines):

Explain why that kind of role is hard to fill locally — mention something specific (e.g., "10+ years on federal jobs," "certified for QA/QC," etc.). Sound like a peer who knows the market, not a sales pitch.

Instructions:

Strip suffixes like "LLC," "LTD," "Inc.," "Construction," "Builders," or "Group." Use short internal names employees would actually say — e.g., "BCR" instead of "Baker Concrete Construction," "Turner" instead of "Turner Construction Company."

- No formal tone. Keep it human and conversational.
- Do not include "role to fill," "rare," or other clichés.
- Do not restate the job title — use that space to add insight.
- Only output the final message — no labels, no explanation.

Insider - style message

Create one casual, insider-style message that feels personal and credible. The tone should be like a fellow founder/operator making a warm connection without high energy.

Formula:

"Hey [First Name], [specific achievement] ([add a brief industry insight])"

Keep it short 3 lines max, genuine. The message should feel like a casual LinkedIn message between peers, not a formal business outreach. NO EMOJIS. NO CTAS Output the result only with no additional text.

Clutch prompts

Given the following input, generate a brief statement similar to this

Came across [Company Name] — saw your recent work and thought it made a lot of sense for the kind of [startups/scale-ups/etc.] I talk to. A lot of them are hiring for [React/web/mobile/etc.] devs, but honestly, they'd move way faster partnering with a team like yours.

Example of perfect output:

Founder Image

Create a casual, insider-style complimentary message for a cybersecurity founder based on their profile photo.

Rules:

- 3 lines max.
- Focus on their presentation style (e.g., clean, minimal, sharp), and subtly connect it to how they might approach building secure products.
- The tone should be like a fellow founder/operator making a warm connection not a LinkedIn or cold outreach.

Keep it short and genuine. The message should feel like a casual note between two operators—not formal, not salesy

Output the result only with no additional text

Generate Thoughtful Congrats Line

Create a brief, casual congratulatory message that references a specific achievement and adds a personal connection point. Use this format:

Congrats on [recent achievement] ([brief industry insight that establishes credibility]).

The message should:

- Start with "Congrats on"
- Feel like an authentic note between peers
- Be just one line
- Avoid sounding like marketing copy

Maintain a casual yet polished tone, like you're brainstorming in a relaxed, high-level meeting.

Prioritize lowercase usage, even for typically capitalized terms. Abbreviate where it makes sense and enhances clarity.

Steer clear of complex jargon; opt for simplicity and impact.

Use the available information about the recipient to craft a message that feels specific and credible. If you have information about investments, mutual connections, industry experience, or previous interactions, reference it in the parenthetical.

Each message must be a single sentence
No explanations, suggestions, or additional commentary

Tone and Style

Professional but conversational
Genuine-sounding, as if written by a real person
Slightly informal but still business-appropriate
Thoughtful and specific rather than generic
Avoid marketing language, buzzwords, and hyperbole

Content Guidelines

Focus on substantive differentiation rather than superficial qualities
Highlight authenticity, depth, innovation, or uniqueness
Frame the observation as a personal impression
Subtly imply knowledge of the industry landscape
Maintain a positive but not overly enthusiastic tone

Example Output

"Happy to see that Acme Solutions is building something with actual substance rather than just riding the industry hype train like most of their competitors."

"Happy to see that TechCorp has taken a uniquely thoughtful approach instead of following the standard playbook everyone else seems to use."

SYSTEM PROMPT:

Persona: Infrastructure-First CTO (Stripe Standard)

You are a world-class infrastructure CTO responsible for systems that move billions of dollars reliably.

You think in primitives, failure modes, and long-term system integrity.

You do not optimize for speed of response — you optimize for correctness, safety, and clarity.

Operating principles:

- Reliability > features
- Correctness > cleverness
- Simplicity > abstraction theater
- Explicit tradeoffs > vague optimism
- Systems thinking > local patches
- Production reality > theoretical purity

Behavior rules:

- Always identify the real problem before proposing solutions
- State assumptions explicitly
- Model failure modes and edge cases first
- Prefer minimal viable primitives over complex frameworks
- Never suggest hacks, shortcuts, or “magic” solutions

- If uncertain, ask clarifying questions before acting
- Treat configuration, routing, identity, and state as infrastructure — never casual
- Think in terms of scale, idempotency, retries, observability, and blast radius
- Avoid motivational language, storytelling, or fluff
- Write like an engineer documenting a production decision

Response style:

- Structured
- Concise but deep
- Mechanistic reasoning
- No hype or personality performance
- Prioritize system invariants and constraints

Your job is not to impress.

Your job is to make systems that don't break.

You're not just getting templates - you're getting the exact internal documents that built and scale my business.

What's Inside:

Client Onboarding SOPs

- Step-by-step client intake process
- Expectation setting frameworks
- Communication protocols that prevent churn

Hiring & Team Templates

- Job descriptions for key roles
- Interview scripts and evaluation criteria
- Contractor vs employee decision matrix
- Performance review templates

Operational Systems

- Campaign management workflows
- Quality control checklists
- Client reporting templates
- Project management SOPs

Internal Documentation

- Team communication protocols
- Standard operating procedures for every process
- Delegation frameworks
- Scalability systems

This isn't theory - these are the actual documents my team uses daily to deliver results for our clients while I focus on growth.

Perfect for:

- Freelancers ready to scale into agency owners
- Business owners entering the automation space
- Anyone who wants to see how a real 7-figure operation runs behind the scenes

Stop guessing how to build systems. Use the exact playbook that works.

Prompt for recruitment fulfilment systems

Generate a short, friendly outreach message in two parts using the following format:

Opener (max 8 words):

Start with:

"Noticed [Company] is hiring for a [PositionName] —"

Then add a casual, non-obvious note about the role (like seniority, urgency, project scale). Keep it natural — something a recruiter or peer might say in a quick message. Do not use formal phrasing or generic buzzwords.

Follow-up (1–2 lines):

Explain why that kind of role is hard to fill locally — mention something specific (e.g., "10+ years on federal jobs," "certified for QA/QC," etc.). Sound like a peer who knows the market, not a sales pitch.

Instructions:

Strip suffixes like "LLC," "LTD," "Inc.," "Construction," "Builders," or "Group." Use short internal names employees would actually say — e.g., "BCR" instead of "Baker Concrete Construction," "Turner" instead of "Turner Construction Company."

- No formal tone. Keep it human and conversational.
- Do not include "role to fill," "rare," or other clichés.
- Do not restate the job title — use that space to add insight.
- Only output the final message — no labels, no explanation.

Generate PS-Line

Generate a P.S. line that mentions if the company would like to connect with their ideal clients more efficiently in the future, you're always ready to help when the time is right. Keep the tone slightly informal but business-appropriate, and limit the line to 15-20 words

- Only output the P.S. line

{{8.text}}

This doc has all the prompts you'll need for market research, offer clarification, cleaning company names, or creating awesome personalization. Each one is effective, so just pick one and plug it into your sales system. Check out the results and see which one works best for you. Try them out and go with what feels right!

Positioning Framework: Offer + Target Industry

"We are targeting [industry] companies that are [pain point or hiring for X]. We are a [your offer/business type]. Generate a structured breakdown of how our cold emails should be positioned, focusing on the key value drivers that matter to our audience. The output should include:

1. Revenue Growth → How our offer helps them increase revenue.
2. Operational Ease → How it simplifies their processes or eliminates inefficiencies.
3. Proof & Credibility → Why they should trust us over alternatives.

Output the result only with no additional text.

Strict AI Prompt: Extract What an ICP Does Clients

Below is their offer and/or website copy. Your task is to ignore vague product features (like “streamlining,” “automation,” “AI-powered,” etc.) and give exactly what they do in simple terms in 4 grade

Clearing your offer + your client’s offer:

"Rewrite the following {{offer}} in a clear and compelling way using this framework:

1. What problem does the service solve? (e.g., lack of leads, time-consuming manual processes, poor engagement)
2. What is the service or solution provided? (e.g., automated lead generation system, full-service email marketing, strategic SEO implementation)
3. What is the specific result or outcome clients can expect? (e.g., more booked meetings, increased revenue, improved lead quality)

Example:

Instead of saying 'We implement lean agile marketing strategies,' say:

👉 'We create and manage automated sales systems that help you connect with 3-4 new clients every month without relying on ads.'

Now, rewrite the offer based on the framework above

Script Building

- "Shorten this script as much as humanly possible without leaving out the value proposition and specific lingo in it."

- "Write this in 5th grade reading level but still include specific lingo (niche) companies will understand."
 - "Rewrite this as if we're talking face to face over coffee."
 - "Rewrite this in a casual yet still direct tone. Don't use filler words, just keep it direct."

Market Research

- "What is the dream end result (niche) companies want in regards to generating new revenue. Do they use any specific keywords/lingo when speaking about that end result?"
 - "Write an imaginary conversation between the CEO and COO of a (niche) company trying to achieve (end result). Make it as realistic as possible."
 - "What's something that keeps the CEO of a (niche) company up late at night? Like NIGHTMARES. Worst case scenario pain points. Give all that apply."

Company Name Formatter Prompt:

Normalize the company name [companyName] by focusing on its most distinctive and memorable element, as it may be reflected in the company's domain [domain], and the person's bio [headline]. The goal is to identify the standout part of the name, typically the first noun, while discarding generic terms.

Output a concise, casual abbreviation employees might use, respecting original capitalization and spacing. Provide only the final normalized result.

1:1 Copy

Return ONLY this format:

Saw [company_name]'s been in [industry/niche] since [year] — clearly [conversational_inference].

How to fill each part:

[industry/niche]

Use the simplest, real-world description of what they actually do.

Not “solutions,” not “services,” not “innovative tech platform.”

Think: “technical recruitment,” “manufacturing staffing,” “eGaming hiring,” “healthcare software,” etc.

[year]

Just the founding year.

[conversational_inference]

Must sound like something you'd say talking to a friend, NOT something you'd write on LinkedIn.

Keep it short, human, obvious.

Examples of perfect tone:

“know how to find the right engineers.”

“must be doing something right with tough roles.”

“clearly good at landing repeat clients.”

“seems like people trust you with the hard stuff.”

“must be solid at the roles most firms skip.”

“clearly figured out how to keep clients around.”

Hard rules:

One sentence.

No buzzwords.

No corporate adjectives.

No fancy language.

Keep it sounding like spoken English.

Data to use:

company data: {{19.result}}

founded year: {{1.foundedOn.year}}

employee count: {{1.employeeCount}}

description: {{1.description}}

Perfect examples your output should mimic:

“Saw Langham’s been in technical recruitment since 2018 — clearly know how to find the right engineers.”

“Saw Esanda’s been in eGaming since 2006 — clearly good at keeping clients around.”

Job Titles Cleaner Prompt:

You will be given a job title that may contain additional information or qualifiers. Your task is to clean this job title by removing unnecessary details and returning only the core job title, example: Sales Representative will be "Sales Rep", Chief Marketing Officer will be "CMO"

Output the result only with no additional text.

Here is the job title to clean:

<job_title>put job title here</job_title>

Recent Achievements Prompt

Follow these rules exactly:

1. Format: congrats on [achievement] with a non-surface level observation.
2. Main message must be a one line max
3. "Congrats" must be lower case every single time.
4. Numbers should be simplified (e.g., $10M)

Example of perfect output:

congrats on the recent growth, scaling outbound maintaining quality is something most can't do.

{{text}}

You are filling in bracketed variables for a cold email template.

Generate statements within the brackets similar to the examples provided.

Rules:

- Keep each statement 8-15 words max
- Sound conversational and natural
- Use the actual data provided (don't make things up)
- Match the tone of the examples exactly

VARIABLE 1: Opening line referencing job posting

Generate a statement within the brackets similar to:

[Saw you're hiring for a [job_title] in [location] - [observation about why this role is noteworthy]]

Job references 1:1

Examples:

- Saw you're hiring for a Field Data Scientist in London - tough role to fill remotely.
- Hiring for an NLP Engineer with RL experience - that's a rare combo.
- Building out your AI team at [company_name] - congrats on the growth.
- Looking for a Solutions Architect in Amsterdam - competitive market right now.

Data to use:

- job_title: {{1.job_title}}
- location: {{1.job_location[]}}
- company_name: {{1.company.name}}
- job_details: {{1.job_description}}

(use this to find noteworthy details like specific tech stack, remote policy, or niche requirements)

Output the end result only (the complete sentence, not the template).

VARIABLE 2: Case study reference (job category)

Generate a statement within the brackets similar to:
[similar [job category description]]

Examples:

- similar niche data science role
- similar senior ML position
- similar hard-to-fill engineering role
- similar Solutions Architect search
- similar backend engineering role with cloud expertise

Data to use:

- job_title: {{1.job_title}}

Output the end result only (just the phrase, e.g., "similar niche data science role").

End Result

This is relatively straightforward. During your market research and positioning process, find the end result they crave and act as if you already have it ready for them.

If you do it properly, your email is positioned as if you're almost doing them a favor and they'd be stupid not to reply.

Here's an example.

{{personalization}}

We have access to [WHAT THEY WANT] in [LOCATION] looking for [THEIR IDEAL CLIENT]

Would you be interested in more information?

Thanks,

(Your name) | (Company)"

Generate PS-Line

Create a P.S. line that:

1. Starts with "Really impressed by how [company_name]"
2. References their core mission using their own words
3. Includes 1 example of their impact

Maximum 1 line total

- No multiple examples
 - Use company's own language
 - Only output the P.S. line

Clean Dates

Convert the date into MMM d with an ordinal suffix (e.g., Jan 24th)."

Output the result only with no additional details or text.

Clean Names

Retrieve this person's full name from `{{2.data.results[].title}}` and their LinkedIn URL `{{2.data.results[].id}}` typically reflected in the URL and the person's profile information. The goal is to extract the full name Output the result only in the correct JSON with no spaces `{"result":""}`

Generating a great personalization

First, start with market research to find out how companies in this niche talk, the best way is to just use AI, 80% of your market research will come from AI. Currently we have the best LLM's so this is exactly what we do at myoProcess.

1. Market Research

"What is the dream end result {{niche}} companies want in regards to generating new revenue. Do they use any specific keywords/lingo when speaking about that end result?"

2. Pain Discovery

Analyze the revenue generation goals and communication patterns of these companies to identify: Desired Outcomes

- What specific revenue growth metrics do they prioritize? (MRR expansion vs customer acquisition vs market penetration)
- What niche market expansion strategies are they most likely to implement? (product line extensions vs geo-expansion vs partnerships)
- What premium pricing or upsell tactics align with their business model? Common Challenges
- What operational bottlenecks limit their revenue scaling? (resource allocation vs tech stack limitations)
- Which niche keyword gaps hinder their marketing performance?
- What competitive pressures threaten their market position? Industry Terminology
- List 5-7 high-value niche keywords/phrases used when discussing:
 - Customer acquisition costs
 - Lifetime value optimization
 - Vertical market expansion
- Identify 3 underutilized long-tail keywords with high conversion potential Competitor Strategies
- What successful revenue playbooks are rivals using in this niche?
- What unique value propositions are resonating in this market?

3.Pre-drafting a one-liner

You will be given a standardized prompt template and an industry. Your task is to edit the prompt to make it specific to the given industry while maintaining the overall structure and intent of the original prompt.

Here is the standardized prompt template:

<prompt_template>

{{PROMPT_TEMPLATE HERE}}

</prompt_template>

The industry you need to adapt this prompt for is:

<industry>

{{INDUSTRY DISCUSSED ABOVE}}

</industry>

Follow these guidelines to edit the prompt:

1. Keep the overall structure and flow of the prompt intact.
2. Maintain the core purpose of crafting a personalized 2-line icebreaker for potential clients.
3. Adjust any industry-specific references or examples to align with the given industry.
4. Modify mentions of "dream clients" or "ideal clients" to reflect typical clients or target audience in the specified industry.
5. Adapt any mentioned challenges or pain points to be relevant to the given industry.
6. If there are specific tools, strategies, or concepts mentioned, replace them with industry-appropriate equivalents if necessary.
7. Ensure that the tone remains conversational, transparent, and focused on building trust.

After editing the prompt, present your revised version inside <edited_prompt> tags. Do not include any explanations or comments outside of these tags. The edited prompt should be a direct replacement for the original, ready to be used as a new template.

<edited_prompt>

[Insert your edited prompt here]

</edited_prompt>

Remember to preserve all formatting instructions from the original prompt, such as starting with "Hi [Name]," followed by a line break, and providing only the icebreaker text without any additional greetings or sign-offs.

Prompt template (put this inside placeholder)

Create a casual, insider-style congratulatory message for {{companies}} that feels personal and credible. The tone should be like a fellow founder/operator making a warm connection. Formula: "congrats on [specific achievement] ([add a brief personal connection or industry insight])" Relate these insights to the service being offered—building sales systems specifically designed to connect them with their dream clients. Example: "Congrats on the impressive Shopify growth (saw you hit the top 1% of stores in your category - we helped scale several others there by making sure they're always talking to the right people.)" Keep it short, genuine, and include a subtle proof point that establishes credibility without bragging. The message should feel like a casual LinkedIn message between peers, not a formal business outreach. Generate 3 variations based on the provided website data.

B)

Create one casual, insider-style congratulatory message that feels personal and credible. The tone should be like a fellow founder/operator making a warm connection. Formula:

"congrats on [specific achievement] ([add a brief industry insight])"

Relate these insights to the service being offered—building sales systems specifically designed to connect them with their dream clients.

Keep it short 3 lines max, genuine. The message should feel like a casual LinkedIn message between peers, not a formal business outreach. NO EMOJIS. Output the result only with no additional text.

Closing

Use the 3 examples in your input when generating one-liners, keep refining the Temperature, token count, until you find the sweet spot, then include your 3 best examples for the AI to generate similar ones.

Brief description of company

Generate a one-line brief on what this company does {{companyName}}. Output only in lowercase, don't add any "." or anything at the end of the result, be succinct, and use a spartan tone. Avoid jargon or extra details. Do not add any leading or trailing spaces. Ensure the output follows this exact structure: a company that [brief action] [brief subject]

Structuring ICP

You will be given a description of an ideal dream client for a company. Your task is to extract and format the key information about this client in a specific way. Here's how to proceed:

1. You will receive the following input:

<dream_ICP>

{{dreamIcp}}

</company_description>

2. From this description, extract:

- The type of organization or business described
- A list of key characteristics or requirements of this ideal client

3. Format the extracted information as follows:

- Start with the type of organization or business
- Follow it with "that:"
- Then list the key characteristics as bullet points, each starting with a dash (-)

- Include any additional relevant information after the bullet points

4. Here are two examples of the correct output format:

Example 1:

medium-sized business or team that:

- Engages in repetitive communication tasks and values efficiency.
- Seeks to streamline workflows using customizable text snippets across various applications.
- Operates in a collaborative environment where quick and accurate information sharing is essential.
- Prioritizes data security and compliance, appreciating TextExpander's SOC 2, GDPR, and CCPA compliance.

Example 2:

mid-sized to large organization that:

- Relies on data-driven decision-making and has a dedicated analytics team.
- Values predictive and prescriptive analytics tools to enhance operational efficiency and strategic planning.
- Is open to collaboration and willing to invest in analytics solutions.
- Has a clear understanding of their analytics needs.

Industries such as financial services, manufacturing, and telecommunications are prime targets, as they often require advanced analytics capabilities.

5. Ensure that you follow this exact format for any company dream client description provided. The output should always begin with the type of organization followed by "that:", then a list of characteristics as bullet points, and any additional relevant information at the end.

Provide the dream ICP output only with no additional text

Claude Operator Grade Personality

Persona: Infrastructure-First CTO (Stripe Standard)

You are a world-class infrastructure CTO responsible for systems that move billions of dollars reliably.

You think in primitives, failure modes, and long-term system integrity.

You do not optimize for speed of response — you optimize for correctness, safety, and clarity.

Operating principles:

- Reliability > features
- When uncertain, ask: would this decision require a postmortem if it fails?
- Correctness > cleverness
- Simplicity > abstraction theater
- Explicit tradeoffs > vague optimism
- Systems thinking > local patches
- Production reality > theoretical purity

Behavior rules:

- Always identify the real problem before proposing solutions
- State assumptions explicitly
- Model failure modes and edge cases first
- Prefer minimal viable primitives over complex frameworks
- Never suggest hacks, shortcuts, or “magic” solutions

- If uncertain, ask clarifying questions before acting
- Treat configuration, routing, identity, and state as infrastructure — never casual
- Think in terms of scale, idempotency, retries, observability, and blast radius
- Avoid motivational language, storytelling, or fluff
- Write like an engineer documenting a production decision

Response style:

- Structured
- Concise but deep
- Mechanistic reasoning
- No hype or personality performance
- Prioritize system invariants and constraints

Your job is not to impress.

Your job is to make systems that don't break.

Hey {{firstName}}

I have an EHS specialist taking on mid-size Midwest plants with open OSHA citations right now — abatement through the re-inspection, so it stays closed.

They recently took a multi-site manufacturer through a repeat citation — an estimated $1.4M in shutdown and legal exposure cleared, inside 45 days.

If anything's open on your side, would love to point them at it.

Hey John

Thank you again, excited to get this moving.

The next thing we need to do is get on a quick intake call so I can understand your world properly before I start routing.

On that call, I'll map:

What you do, who your ideal client / partner is, sweet spot and any case studies or proof points I should know about

This will help me aim correctly and keep the targeting + positioning clean on my side.

Who pays for tech stack (selling it standalone)

If you sell a "hands-off system" but the client still has to go buy extra tools, it feels annoying to them. It's like selling someone a toy but telling them they need to go buy the batteries somewhere else. Most people don't like that.

But if you include everything inside your price, it feels easier and more complete. They don't have to think, they don't have to shop, they don't have to learn new tech. It's just done.

And because you're covering the tools for them, you can charge more — just like a restaurant charges more for a meal because they buy all the ingredients for you. Clients who aren't tech-savvy prefer this because it removes every headache. They pay once, and everything works.

So the client gets peace of mind, and you get to charge a higher price.

Noticed [clean_company_name] helps [job_titles] at [company_type] — I know a few who [pain_description].

Rules:

- [clean_company_name] = company name WITHOUT "LLC," "Inc.," "Corp," "Ltd"
Use the abbreviation of the name someone who works in that company might use.

- [job_titles] = real titles only: "CFOs," "store managers," "IT directors"
- [company_type] = specific type: "mid-sized law firms," "Series A startups," "regional banks"
- [pain_description] = how they complain: "waste hours on," "lose money when," "can't find"
- NO corporate speak: avoid "solutions," "leverage," "optimize," "streamline," "platform"

Prompt (Strict Format, No Jargon, No Fluff, Clean Company Name):

You must return a single sentence in this exact format:

Noticed [companyName] helps [DreamClient] at [company type/size] — built a connector system that can intro you to [same role/similar roles] who [specific, frustrating problem they complain about daily].

Rules:

- Use exact job titles: "HR managers," "lab directors," "store owners" (not "teams" or "stakeholders")
- Use specific company types: "Series A biotech startups," "mid-sized retail chains," "growing law firms"
- Pain must sound like actual workplace gripes: "can't find decent lab techs for months," "spend half their day fixing broken registers," "miss court deadlines because hiring takes forever"

- No corporate jargon: Avoid "capacity," "shortages," "gaps," "challenges," "bandwidth," "resources"
- Use ampersands (&) to connect problems - makes it feel more conversational
- Avoid repeating the exact same job title - use variations like "directors," "managers," "owners"
- Be ultra-specific: Name the exact role, exact time waste, exact headache

Bad example: "teams struggling with resource constraints"

Good example: "store managers who can't hire cashiers fast enough & are working 70-hour weeks covering shifts"

Company description:

Company tech:

Company name:

So let's start from the beginning, when you sign a client, they pay you money, usually you have to go through the onboarding process or the kickoff phase,

The onboarding (or kickoff) phase is just a 15-20 minute call where both you and the client that paid you do this:

- The client will fill out a simple form live on the call.
- They would give you everything you need in terms businesses assets, information that is needed in order for you to deliver the project.
- You'll also make sure you and the client both know what will happen and when.
- Agree on what you're trying to achieve and what you'll hand over.
- Tell them how often you'll talk and when you are you're gonna be available.

My advice, is always hop on this call, don't make the mistake of skipping it and handling everything async, and also never send a questionnaire and wait. Go through it together because this is where you shine!

GET-MORE-LEADS

Since you downloaded this, here's extra value for you:

Reason this copy worked:

The timing trigger is brilliant - targeting new hires at recently funded companies. They're under massive pressure to prove themselves fast.

"Before their first board review" - that's career-level urgency. Every new marketing exec is terrified of that first board meeting.

The pain callout at the end is perfect. "90-day mark after funding is brutal" - you're speaking directly to their biggest fear.

The positioning: You're not selling marketing services, you're connecting someone who solves their exact nightmare scenario.

Scale & Automation

How do you find more of these targets?

Set up alerts for:

- LinkedIn job announcements (new marketing hires at funded companies)
- Crunchbase funding alerts (Series A/B rounds in last 90 days)
- TechCrunch funding news
- Company press releases about new executive hires

Pro move: Set up Google alerts for "Series A" + "new CMO" or "VP Marketing" to get fresh targets daily.

This is how real money gets made - finding a winning angle and scaling it relentlessly instead of constantly testing new approaches.

My target

Companies that raised Series A/B/C/D funding 60-90 days ago → They just got a pile of investor cash and made big promises. Now 2-3 months later, the honeymoon's over, and investors are asking: "Where's the traction?"

They just hired a new CMO/VP of Marketing in the last 30-90 days → They're in the hot seat. First 90 days = either you prove you're worth the big salary or risk getting axed.

You're stacking two pain points:

New marketing boss → "I need fast results or I'm toast."

Fresh funding → "We've got cash but investors are breathing down my neck."

Hey [First Name], [Redacted]
Noticed you joined [Company] as [Title] about [X] weeks after their $[amount] [Series A/B] round. Congrats on the role.
The 90-day mark after funding is brutal for new marketing leaders - boards expect pipeline but your team isn't fully built.
I know someone who helped a new [Industry] CMO get 22 sales-ready leads in their first month - before their first board review.

Hey {{firstName}}

Just wanted to circle back—companies impacted by breaches often have a 90-day window where recovery efforts matter most.

Should we line up a quick call to explore options?

Breakup

Hey {{firstName}}—

Won't keep chasing—just thought this might be worth exploring after the last incident.

If not the right time, I'll step back.

Thanks for the time,

Prompt for recruitment fulfilment systems

Generate a short, friendly outreach message in two parts using the following format:

Opener (max 8 words):

Start with:

"Noticed [Company] is hiring for a [PositionName] —"

Then add a casual, non-obvious note about the role (like seniority, urgency, project scale). Keep it natural — something a recruiter or peer might say in a quick message. Do not use formal phrasing or generic buzzwords.

Follow-up (1–2 lines):

Explain why that kind of role is hard to fill locally — mention something specific (e.g., "10+ years on federal jobs," "certified for QA/QC," etc.). Sound like a peer who knows the market, not a sales pitch.

Instructions:

Strip suffixes like "LLC," "LTD," "Inc.," "Construction," "Builders," or "Group." Use short internal names employees would actually say — e.g., "BCR" instead of "Baker Concrete Construction," "Turner" instead of "Turner Construction Company."

- No formal tone. Keep it human and conversational.
- Do not include "role to fill," "rare," or other clichés.
- Do not restate the job title — use that space to add insight.
- Only output the final message — no labels, no explanation.

Insider - style message

Create one casual, insider-style message that feels personal and credible. The tone should be like a fellow founder/operator making a warm connection without high energy.

Formula:

"Hey [First Name], [specific achievement] ([add a brief industry insight])"

Keep it short 3 lines max, genuine. The message should feel like a casual LinkedIn message between peers, not a formal business outreach. NO EMOJIS. NO CTAS Output the result only with no additional text.

Clutch prompts

Given the following input, generate a brief statement similar to this

Came across [Company Name] — saw your recent work and thought it made a lot of sense for the kind of [startups/scale-ups/etc.] I talk to. A lot of them are hiring for [React/web/mobile/etc.] devs, but honestly, they'd move way faster partnering with a team like yours.

Example of perfect output:

Founder Image

Create a casual, insider-style complimentary message for a cybersecurity founder based on their profile photo.

Rules:

- 3 lines max.
- Focus on their presentation style (e.g., clean, minimal, sharp), and subtly connect it to how they might approach building secure products.
- The tone should be like a fellow founder/operator making a warm connection not a LinkedIn or cold outreach.

Keep it short and genuine. The message should feel like a casual note between two operators—not formal, not salesy

Output the result only with no additional text

Generate Thoughtful Congrats Line

Create a brief, casual congratulatory message that references a specific achievement and adds a personal connection point. Use this format:

Congrats on [recent achievement] ([brief industry insight that establishes credibility]).

The message should:

- Start with "Congrats on"
- Feel like an authentic note between peers
- Be just one line
- Avoid sounding like marketing copy

Maintain a casual yet polished tone, like you're brainstorming in a relaxed, high-level meeting.

Prioritize lowercase usage, even for typically capitalized terms. Abbreviate where it makes sense and enhances clarity.

Steer clear of complex jargon; opt for simplicity and impact.

Use the available information about the recipient to craft a message that feels specific and credible. If you have information about investments, mutual connections, industry experience, or previous interactions, reference it in the parenthetical.

Each message must be a single sentence
No explanations, suggestions, or additional commentary

Tone and Style

Professional but conversational
Genuine-sounding, as if written by a real person
Slightly informal but still business-appropriate
Thoughtful and specific rather than generic
Avoid marketing language, buzzwords, and hyperbole

Content Guidelines

Focus on substantive differentiation rather than superficial qualities
Highlight authenticity, depth, innovation, or uniqueness
Frame the observation as a personal impression
Subtly imply knowledge of the industry landscape
Maintain a positive but not overly enthusiastic tone

Example Output

"Happy to see that Acme Solutions is building something with actual substance rather than just riding the industry hype train like most of their competitors."

"Happy to see that TechCorp has taken a uniquely thoughtful approach instead of following the standard playbook everyone else seems to use."

Prompt for recruitment fulfilment systems

Generate a short, friendly outreach message in two parts using the following format:

Opener (max 8 words):

Start with:

"Noticed [Company] is hiring for a [PositionName] —"

Then add a casual, non-obvious note about the role (like seniority, urgency, project scale). Keep it natural — something a recruiter or peer might say in a quick message. Do not use formal phrasing or generic buzzwords.

Follow-up (1-2 lines):

Explain why that kind of role is hard to fill locally — mention something specific (e.g., "10+ years on federal jobs," "certified for QA/QC," etc.). Sound like a peer who knows the market, not a sales pitch.

Instructions:

Strip suffixes like "LLC," "LTD," "Inc.," "Construction," "Builders," or "Group." Use short internal names employees would actually say — e.g., "BCR" instead of "Baker Concrete Construction," "Turner" instead of "Turner Construction Company."

- No formal tone. Keep it human and conversational.
- Do not include "role to fill," "rare," or other clichés.
- Do not restate the job title — use that space to add insight.
- Only output the final message — no labels, no explanation.

Insider - style message

Create one casual, insider-style message that feels personal and credible. The tone should be like a fellow founder/operator making a warm connection without high energy.

Formula:

"Hey [First Name], [specific achievement] ([add a brief industry insight])"

Keep it short 3 lines max, genuine. The message should feel like a casual LinkedIn message between peers, not a formal business outreach. NO EMOJIS. NO CTAS Output the result only with no additional text.

Clutch prompts

Given the following input, generate a brief statement similar to this

Came across [Company Name] — saw your recent work and thought it made a lot of sense for the kind of [startups/scale-ups/etc.] I talk to. A lot of them are hiring for [React/web/mobile/etc.] devs, but honestly, they'd move way faster partnering with a team like yours.

Example of perfect output:

Founder Image

Create a casual, insider-style complimentary message for a cybersecurity founder based on their profile photo.

Rules:

- 3 lines max.
- Focus on their presentation style (e.g., clean, minimal, sharp), and subtly connect it to how they might approach building secure products.
- The tone should be like a fellow founder/operator making a warm connection not a LinkedIn or cold outreach.

Keep it short and genuine. The message should feel like a casual note between two operators—not formal, not salesy

Output the result only with no additional text

Step 1: Pick ONE vertical

Don't say "great, we'll build a sales systems campaigns for all four!"

Here's what actually happens when you go broad: Your manufacturing email talks about "helping companies across industries fill technical roles." Generic garbage. Your healthcare email mentions "our experience with various sectors." More generic garbage.

The mental model is simple: Case Study = Market.

Most people think: "Who can I sell to?" → "What do I tell them?"

Optional: High-Ticket Closer Path

If they're seriously considering you as a closer, position yourself like this:

"If I'm taking meetings and closing deals for you, we're talking strategic partner — not just lead gen. Let's test 3–5 calls, and if the close rate hits, we can lock in commission-based terms."

That's where you:

- Take 15–25% of deal size
- Or a fixed commission ($1.5K–$3.5K) per closed deal
Or even set up a retainer + success kicker

That's massively appealing to other solar, HVAC etc

First Deal Closed - $2850 ($1600 upfront, rest paid later)
Hey Dima,

Excited to share that I just closed my first deal over for $2850 a few days ago. It was a local MSP company that bought 10 calls for $2850. Just wanted to write this to inspire the community and show my appreciation to David.

I started AI automation from three weeks ago. I'm fresh off finishing high school and wanted to find a job that could give me real money before college. Notice that, I've never had any experience with AI automation, let alone anything related to running a business, taking sales calls, or running money (let alone investing).

I spent my first week on Upwork (the deal) but got utterly burned within a few days for sending a Persuasion proposal to an interested client (before Upwork started to be recommending the platform). I had some of the best advice and what taught my eye was the focus on selling sales systems.

It closed immediately. There was no point in selling AI automation generally when they hired me and all responsibility. Even if I needed some training on Upwork, I had a client that required a weekly effort out of automation (that probably wasn't capable of handling), making nothing but impossible. People are slow and business interest in getting customers, otherwise everything else is secondary.

The difficulty had yet recommended enough to be sharing "advice", but here's what I've learned so far:

1. Ask for help. David is generally one of the most helpful people that there are when it comes to answer all my questions. For $2850, this is the best deal that's not there not only in terms of the value of the service, but also David's willingness to help.
2. Learn from action. David had this paradigm thinking about how you're going to scrape, which niche to target, how to build etc. You will never be perfect on the first run, and getting better comes from more action, not "thinking about it" and doing nothing.
3. Scale. You just need to hit the first or other goal to get results. For example, the campaign where I closed my client for sale at a 4.2% daily rate, and my current campaigns are averaging around 2.5% (which obviously isn't the greatest, but I can't do without more success). I immediately spent the $1.6k upfront payment I earned in order to buy more realtors, and I have paid off. Just by some parents thinking I have $1.6k per day right now.

Hope this gives you the best to get with with it.

What does the client do?

- They're a managed IT services provider (MSP) for small businesses in Florida & Michigan.
- They handle everything IT-related so their clients don't have to think about tech problems.

Their ideal clients:

SMBs (1-200 employees)

Law firms, manufacturers, medical/dental offices, accounting firms, etc.

Business owners frustrated with slow, unresponsive IT providers

How to fulfill?

Start with the strongest case study your client has (the one where they got great results).

- Look at what industry that case study came from (e.g., law firms, ecom brands, healthcare).
- Then target that same industry for outreach because:
- You can show proof that you already helped a similar company.
- Prospects in that industry will instantly see the relevance ("oh, this worked for someone like us").
- It gives you the fastest chance to book intros since you're not trying to convince them from scratch.

Have a "Trojan" question in the onboarding: Sometimes clients unconsciously want to work with an ideal client.

- I include "Share a website URL that matches your ideal client". Then I look through the keywords and the exact vertical, copy it to find similar companies, and scrape them. This also tells me which industry to start with so I don't reach out to a million industries because every industry is different.

File Forster

File Forster Let's gooo! Huge first deal!

Niche: Recruitment

Vertical or Sub Niche: Electrical

Electrical companies need workers (electricians, engineers, project managers).

Recruiting companies find these workers and charge a fee - usually $15K-25K per person they place.

One successful hire pays for 6+ months of your service. So if you help them place just one person, they've already made their money back.

The beauty: You're not selling abstract "lead generation." You're connecting electrical companies that need workers with a recruiter who finds workers. Simple connector

How to deliver?

How to find these companies?

Look for companies

Researcher, CHIEF roles.

"We got the SDM actual job" - They need more workers

Looking for electronics/ingeneers:

"New hiring electronics" - They obviously need workers

New aftermarket announcements

"Opening our Dallas office" - They need workers for the SDM job

Simple rule:

Big announcement - they need people - perfect

Close to email their client finding workers.

It's like seeing your neighbor put up a "Help" sign.

Company Size:

40-50 employees (big enough to hire regularly, small enough for direct contact)

Revenue:

$50M-$80M (bigger budgets for recruiting head)

Who to talk to in these companies?

For 50-500 employees SDM companies:

Email the OPERATIONS MANAGER

Why Operations Manager?

• They run the day-to-day work

• They know which projects need more people

• They can make hiring decisions quickly

• They find the jobs when they're SDM job

Simple rule for 50-500 companies:

The Operations Manager is the sweet spot - senior enough to make decisions, hands-on enough to know they need people.

Don't email:

• Owner (too busy with his private stuff)

• HR (not an understood project need)

• Regular electronics (can't make hiring decisions)

What to say? (this is AI generated)

Hey Reader,

Ever Wonder: Electronics is handling the engineering/production for the new SDM Cluster Engineering Head facility - massive project.

Quick question: are you (current hiring situation) or (hiring/looking for)?

Or: "I've been hiring electronics (with budget of their situation), I've been challenged in probably (intensity word)." "I work with a contracting specialist who focuses specifically on their exact industry needs."

Step 3: Proof "What's a brief overview of your current situation?"

Key: Always use their industry specific language and reference their actual recent recruiting announcements.

Example perfect output:

What does this client do?

They built a smart AI system that helps big companies handle their data without all the boring manual work.

Imagine you're running a huge SDM company, drowning in spreadsheets, databases, and a host of data points consistently getting lost just to pull reports or move data from one system to another. Instead of hiring more people and wasting months, it's a platform acts like a super-smart assistant that:

• Gets what you want (you just ask it in plain English or talk to it like Siri/Ms. AI).

• Gets all the data across your company's systems.

• Gets it up, organizes it, and gives you answers fast.

• Gets even automates repetitive tasks so your team isn't stuck doing grunt work.

They're looking for big tech companies that:

• Build software to other businesses (B2B SaaS) - these are companies building platforms or tools for other companies (not regular consumers).

• Really make good money ($40M-$50M/year) - so they're not tiny startups; they're established and growing.

• Are data heavy - they deal with tons of data every day (analytics, reports, dashboards, etc.) and are probably hiring Data Scientists and Engineers to keep up.

• Want to scale fast without hiring too many people - their current manual data processes are slowing them down, and they're open to AI automation to speed things up.

• Operate in North America and usually have 100-1,000 employees.

Where to find them? (their clients)

Funding Stage: Series A, B, or C

Funding Date: Last 12-24 months

Industry: SaaS, Analytics, Big Data, AI, Data Infrastructure, Enterprise Software

Employee Count: 100-1,000

Revenue Estimate: $40M-$50M

Connector Thought Process

Instead of selling the solution directly, we act like a helpful peer who's seen it work and is offering a warm intro to the team behind it.

This:

• Reduces resistance

• Positions them as proven - in demand

• Avoids sounding like a cold pitch

Hey (FirstName),

Been talking to a few (blending angle) SDM teams recently—same issue keeps coming up:

(they're pain)

One team I know behind a platform called AI helped a healthcare client go from a 6-month data gap to back to real-time processing in 30 days. No databases, no scripts. Just voice or text to query across systems.

If you're exploring AI-driven ops or just curious about hands-free data access, happy to intro you. Totally up to you.

Legal Services Client (2M sales, $150/meeting)

What Does The Client Do (So Simple)

Client helps people from poor or ignored neighborhoods get really good jobs in tech sales.

Instead of giving them certificates or making them sit in boring classes, they teach them how to actually sell things like people do in real tech companies.

So, when they finish the program, they don't just have a piece of paper — they have the skills to get hired and make money.

- They teach real sales skills (like how to talk to customers and close deals).
- They focus on people who didn't have a fair chance before (like Black women or people without college degrees).
- Their students go from making very little money (like $8,000 a year) to making a lot more (like $40,000+).
- They've already helped almost 500 people get great jobs — and want to help thousands more.

real training → real jobs → real money → real change.

The Companies They Wanna Work With

Companies don't just care about making money — they also want to do good in the world.

Think companies like Salesforce, HubSpot, or LinkedIn.

They still care about revenue — but they also want to make a difference through hiring, volunteering, and equity programs.

The People They Wanna Talk To

- Head of Social Impact
- Corporate Social Responsibility Manager
- Community Engagement Lead
- ESG Program Manager
- Director of Purpose
- DEI Business Partner
- Head of Sales Enablement
- VP of Sales Development
- Director of Workforce Partnerships
- Program Officer
- Grants Manager

How To Deliver?

Focus on one industry with a strong case study is how to "deliver" and scale intelligently.

Even if client wants to target the whole planet

Start With The Most Impressive Case Study Your Client Has (SaaS & Tech Companies)

20 job seekers → $1.2 million in combined salaries in 90 days

→ That's $60K per graduate

→ The results were achieved in just 90 days. SaaS teams love speed — quick wins with real-world change.

→ This wasn't a one-off hire — it was a repeatable cohort model. It shows how a company can fund a group and generate measurable change.

→ Tech companies love cohort-based bootcamps (e.g. RevGenius, SV Academy). This fits into that mold

What To Say?

Hey ([Reader]),

Saw you're leading social impact at Acme Inc — curious if workforce development is part of your 2025 goals?

We recently helped a local tech company sponsor a cohort of underrepresented talent — and in just 90 days, those 20 graduates landed $1.2M in combined salaries in SDR/BDR roles. They didn't need to hire anyone. They simply funded a proven model that drives measurable equity — without the red tape.

At X we partner with teams at Salesforce, LinkedIn, and Sprout Social to unlock real economic mobility for underrepresented professionals — through cohort-based training, career coaching, and skills-based volunteering.

Here's why our partners love the model:

- No hiring quotas — just real, trackable impact
- ROI you can point to: $8K in → $60K+ salaries per participant
- Volunteer options that actually energize your employees

Would it make sense to explore what this could look like at ([CompanyName])?

Happy to send you a 1-page outline through the $1.2M cohort data.

The opening question gets them thinking - you ask about their 2025 goals, so they start thinking about what they want to do next year

Then you immediately show proof - you tell them about 20 people who got $1.2M worth of jobs. That's real results, not just talk.

You speak their language - social impact people want to help others AND show their boss it worked. You give them both.

The flow makes sense - you ask a question, show proof, explain how it works, then ask if they want to learn more.

You're not asking them to donate money or do charity work. You're showing them how to help people get good jobs while making their company look good. That's exactly what they want.

The key: Focus on universal business challenges that every $1-5M owner faces regardless of industry - cash flow, scaling, team management, breaking growth plateaus.

Sales System Workflow

Why Use a Router?

To organize our leads by how badly they need help. It's like sorting patients in a hospital - some need immediate attention, others can wait.

Think of it as creating 3 different buckets:

1. High Priority - Practices with websites but almost no reviews (<10) and few images (<5)
 - These are desperate cases losing tons of patients
 - They need immediate help and will see dramatic results
2. Medium Priority - Practices with websites, decent reviews (10-20), but still under-optimized
 - These are established but leaving money on the table
 - Good targets but not as urgent as bucket #1

Belaid Saad

Hey 🙋

Was searching {{CategoryName}} in {{city}} today and {{clinicName}} didn't show up in the top results

I know a team that can get you to the top 3 — guaranteeing 5 new patients weekly now without running ads.

If you're up for it, we could plan a quick chat, and I can help with the introductions.

Cheers

Belaid Saad

This copy formula

1. "Was searching today" feels authentic and non-salesy. It creates a reason for contact that doesn't seem pre-planned.
2. Mentioning their clinic by name and that it "didn't show up" creates relevance and urgency without getting them defensive.
3. "5 new patients weekly" is specific and interesting. The dentist will calculate the revenue impact ($1,500-3,000+ per new patient).
4. "If you're up for it" and "Cheers" tone feels like a helpful suggestion from a random guy, not a salesperson we all dislike.
5. The whole email is under 60 words with plenty of white space. Anyone can read it, and understand in seconds

Focus on the END RESULT clients want, not the process or service you provide.

Dentists don't wake up thinking "I need better Google Business Profile optimization" - they wake up thinking "I need more patients in chairs."
